ARTHUR ELGORT

Vogue photographer Arthur Elgort made his mark in 1971 when his portfolio of black-and-white pictures of a model playing with a dog ran in the British version of the magazine, and something new was injected into fashion photography: movement. This snapshot aesthetic has characterized his work since the beginning of his career and garnered him acclaim for bringing buoyancy, lightness, and naturalism into fashion and advertising images. Trained as a painter, he switched to photography to feed his need for human company. In addition to shooting the world's top models and celebrities, he has gone backstage at the New York City Ballet and jazz clubs to capture dancers and musicians. Elgort attributes his improvisatory, active approach to his lifelong passion for jazz and ballet, claiming, "You can take a picture or you can make a picture. I much prefer the latter."

MAHTAB HUSSAIN - YOU GET ME?

Mahtab Hussain's photographs explore the critical question of identity among young working-class British Asian men. You Get Me? addresses the contested political terrain of race and representation, respect and cultural difference. The men portrayed in Hussain's portraits identify as Muslim, and expressed that they felt culturally ridiculed by the constant flow of derogatory media representation of their lives.

The 24 portraits in the exhibition examine how the weight of masculinity impacts the subject's sense of self, as they navigate the complex identity formations historically placed upon them. Hussain photographed the series over a nine-year period in Birmingham – where he grew up – stopping individuals in the street and starting conversations as he took their portrait. He later expanded the project to London and Nottingham.

JOEL MEYEROWITZ: TOWARDS COLOUR 1962-1978

A new exhibition of work by Joel Meyerowitz will open at Beetles+Huxley on 23 May, including rarely seen black and white photographs from Meyerowitz's early career. The exhibition will highlight the photographer's seminal street photography - tracing his gradual move from using both black and white and colour film to a focus on pure colour, over the course of two decades.

The subject of over 350 exhibitions in museums and galleries worldwide and two-time Guggenheim Fellow, Meyerowitz is one of the most highly-regarded photographers of the second half of the twentieth century. Alongside his contemporaries, William Eggleston and Stephen Shore, Meyerowitz drove the positioning of colour photography from the margins to the mainstream.

The exhibition will feature bodies of work made by Meyerowitz between 1963 and 1978, from his very early days shooting in black and white on the streets of New York alongside Garry Winogrand and Tony Ray-Jones, to the year he published his first book, "Cape Light". This period was vital for Meyerowitz as he began to question the medium of photography itself, engaging in an aesthetic exploration of both form and composition. He moved away from what he describes as the "caught moment" toward a more non-hierarchical image in which everything in the image, including the colour, plays an equal, vital role. These intricately structured images, which Meyerowitz calls "field photographs", marked a seismic shift in the history of photography.

The exhibition will include works made in Florida and New Mexico as well as iconic street scenes captured in New York. The exhibition will also include a selection of photographs taken during Meyerowitz's travels across Europe in 1966, including images of France, Spain and Greece.

Born in 1938 in New York City, Meyerowitz studied painting and medical drawing at Ohio State University before working as an art director at an advertising agency. Having seen Robert Frank at work, Meyerowitz was inspired and left advertising in 1962 to pursue photography. By 1968, a solo exhibition of his photographs was mounted at the Museum of Modern Art, New York. Meyerowitz has been the recipient of the National Endowment of the Arts and the National Endowment for the Humanities awards, and has published over sixteen books.

SPA FOTOFEST 2017

At the SPA Inter-Club PDI Championship on 13 May 2017, it was announced that SPA are organising a Fotofest for members of SPA clubs. This will be taking place at Croydon Masonic Hall on Saturday 04 November 2017 and will be an all day event, starting at 10:00 and finishing around 16:30. We have four presenters on the day, each speaking for an hour: Tom Way (wildlife) and Will Cheung (magazine editor) will be presenting before lunch and in the afternoon, we have Gavin Hoey (Photoshop guru) and Steven Le Prevost (creative) giving presentations.

There will be a separate room where several sponsors will be selling products and there will be plenty of time to visit the stands. So far, Fotospeed, Canon and Longridge are confirmed, further sponsor names will follow. The sponsors will also be providing attractive raffle prizes.

Tickets will go on sale for £15 at the beginning of September and from the beginning of October, remaining tickets will be offered at £20 to surrounding federations. Capacity at the Hall is around 200.

So, put the date in your diaries and watch out for more details.

Thanks for reading, and happy snapping,

Steve
